At 6:45 p.m. on June 29, Ambassador Willauer called me from Tegucigalpa and advised that at 4 p.m. the Castillo Armas radio announced there that Castillo Armas and Monzon were now meeting.

He said that his plane had taken off with Coerr and a local man, but had been forced back by bad weather. He feels that it would be hopeless to try to get through at this time. I told him to hold up unless we advise to the contrary since it seemed that things were going pretty well at this time.
